

Did you know...

One way to help a child develop their language skills is by reading to them. This is also a great way to help them start to develop an awareness of other people's facial expressions, what they indicate and the emotions that everyone feels. For example, if someone is crying in the book that is being read, asking your child why the character is crying opens the door to discuss what happened to cause the character to become upset and to discuss other emotions that are visible in the character's expressions throughout the book.
